COCHEGAN ROCK LARGER THAN MADISON BOWLDER

J. H. Brand Disputes New Hampshire's Claim of Largest Rock in Country.

J. H. Brand, formerly of this city writes The Bulletin that during a trip o the mountains in New Hampshire e saw in Madison a bowlder which is said to be the largest in North Amer-ica. The claim is disputed, Mr. Brand says, as Cochegan Rock in Montville, has the reputation of being the largest in the world. Madison Bowlder is 90 feet long, 38 et high and 40 feet wide, being bughly rectangular in shape. Its cubic ontents could therefore be estimated it 136,890 feet.

Cochezan Rock is 58 feet long on its northern side, 70 feet on its south-ern, 54 feet wide at its eastern end, ern, 54 leet wine at its eastern end, 56 at its western, and its maximum height is 60 feet. This rock is irregular in shape, and its contents less casily estimated than those of its rival claimant to the greatest size of any in this continent. By averaging length of sides and allowing competitive of of sides and allowing something of its height on account of the rounder top 176,000 feet would be a fair esti-mate, leaving Madison bowlder a chance to grow 39,200 cubic feet before reaching the size of Cochegan, the difference being enough to make a larger stone than most of us would want to carry very far.
